Singular Phenomenon.

A very singular phenomenon, and one that has attracted great attention and elicited general inquiry, occurred in this county, on Friday, February 5th. In this locality the day was fair, and no indications of a storm were discernable. The people residing in the Western part of the county, however, noticed that about noon, a dense, peculiar looking cloud was hanging over Bald Hills about the head of Roaring River. At about 3 o'clock, the residents of Bald Hills, Roaring River, Janesville and Eagle Creek, were startled by an explosion so terrifically loud and peculiar in sound as to create general confusion, and fear on the part of some that the hour of final account had indeed arrived. In several localities in the immediate vicinity of Bald Hills the earth was felt to tremble and vibrate for several seconds after the explosion, leading some to suppose that an earthquake had taken place. Many persons in this town, twenty miles from Bald Hills heard the explosion, but parties on Roaring River, and in the vicinity of Grey's store, affirm that they first heard one very loud report, which was followed by a succession of lesser sounds, resembling the almost simultaneous discharge of artillery. Two men, a white man and an Indian, were tending a ditch at Bald Hills when the phenomenon occurred. The former, who is a man of intelligence and veracity, states that while he and the Indian were passing along the ditch he observed a sudden flash of yellowish light which illuminated everything around, followed by an explosion so loud as to almost stun him. While the sounds were still reverberating, he cast his eyes upward, and beheld something resembling an immense ball of blazing fire fall with great velocity to the earth, producing a shock which caused the earth to tremble beneath his feet. His first impression was that the falling body had struck within a few hundred yards of the place where he was standing, but afterwards concluded that the distance was much greater. For several minutes after the fall of the mysterious body the air was strongly impregnated with a peculiar odor resembling that caused by heat generated by friction in heavy machinery. The Indian alluded to, also beheld the fall of the fiery mass, and fell upon the ground, where he remained several minutes with his hands upon his eyes, nearly frightened out of his wits. On regaining his feet he started to run, and never stopped until he had gained a rancheria several miles distant, where he succeeded in satisfying his copper colored companions that the great Spirit was very angry with him for some cause.

From what information we have been able to gain in regard to the matter, we conclude that the falling mass was nothing more nor less than an immense aerolite or meteoric body. Efforts will be made to discover the exact locality where it fell, but, as a very heavy rain storm occurred during the next few days following its descent, its discovery is doubtful.—Shasta Courier.
